Decrease of Population the Tragic and Pathetical Result of Civilization.

From Monroe, (Neb.), Looking Glass. Manila, P. I., Mar. 24, 1901. E. A. Gerrard, Editor Looking Glass. As a "peace offering" for not notifying you of my change of address I will tell you something of my trip—or rather begin a series of letters which I trust will be interesting to your readers.

I left Fullerton Jan. 24, to join my son, W. W. Barre, who had accepted a position in the Philippines. On the 25th I joined him and his family on the evening train for San Francisco. Reached San Francisco the 28th, which gave us a few days to see the city and surrounding country as we sailed Feb. 1st for Manila.

There are no end of surprises in traveling, and the first was that the climate of the Islands is so gradually it seems impossible that we are thousands of feet above sea level, until you notice the difficulty in breathing, and look up to see a sky so blue it is almost black, because of the clearness of the atmosphere.

I began to wonder what all these masses of rocks with ridges and spurs, were made for; miles on miles of sage brush, a few stunted evergreens "coming up through great tribulation," but the Creator has no doubt a treasure house in the heights above and the depths beneath. Here and there are mining camps, and the people came out to look at people from "God's Country."

Little towns that owe their existence to the railroad, occasionally a city with electric lights and all modern improvements, like Cheyenne and Ogden. Nothing could have been more wonderful after snow and rocks than the beautiful Sacramento valley, clothed in the soft, green verdure of Spring, wheat fields, oranges, summer flowers, and vines.

The Sacramento sweeps over miles of country more like a lake at this season when the mountain snows are melting. The bay which we soon reach is gay with shipping and very beautiful with homes of wealth and culture, on the sloping hillsides that are cultivated to the water's edge. It is delightful after the long weary railroad trip, but still we feel a little disappointed on reaching San Francisco, for the wind chills us and we want furs some portions of the day.

I saw nasturtiums that had evidently had no trouble with frost as they were in full bloom. Some portions of San Francisco are like New York and other eastern cities, but there are still many buildings and streets that sprang up like magic in the old mining days and have not yet been swept away by the march of improvement. The city is largely of wood, and it seemed to me strange that no more disastrous fires had visited her. Some of the homes are elegant, and luxurious; surrounded with semi-tropical trees and plants. The park is interesting for visitors, having a small herd of buffaloes, an immense grizzly bear, a condor who has a apartment entirely apart from other birds, an indication of his character, a large bird house enclosing trees and shrubs where are birds and fowls from almost every clime. The whole world knows that California is noted for delicious fruits, which we not only enjoyed during our stay in the city, but our courteous host, "The Occidental" on the morning of our departure sent a large basket of the fruit, oranges, apples, nuts, and raisins, to our room for us to take on board the Laysan, together with a bouquet of fragrant flowers. He evidently expects us to return that way, but such is not our intention, as we hope to encircle the globe during our trip.

At noon February 1, we went on board the Laysan and were happily surprised to see Mrs. Robbins, sister of Mrs. M. H. Brown of Fullerton, with her son to see us off. While others had many friends to bid them "bon voyage" ours were away and long will we remember the thoughtful kindness of these friends during our stay in San Francisco.

The Laysan having been recently repaired, cruised about the harbor for a few hours to test the engines before trusting herself outside. A little before sunset we passed the Golden Gate, and started on our long "roll" for Hawaii. The Pacific forgot her good manners and tossed us sideways and endwise and otherwise. The Laysan is one of the smallest transports in the service and seemed staunch and sea-worthy, but we registered a vow to go back on a bigger boat. Scarcely had we touched the ocean before faces began to pale, the firm set lips blanched, and one after another sought their state-rooms or had urgent business to the side of the boat; studying sharks? or possibly hoped to get a glimpse of the sea-serpent, and ere long the last scuffer and boaster "I never saw sea sickness" sought the steamer chair on deck and silently slid away into the gloom.

February 9th we sighted Molokai, in the early morning, away to the southwest as a translucent screen on the tropical haze, rigid mountain forms began to appear in the distance, the breath of the land, nodding palms, glittering sands and turquoise waters, at last Honolulu. The beautiful line of towering hills and mountains piled up to the clouds, over which hung a dark screen, that let go and came down upon us when we were trying to navigate the pools and lakes of the lower streets, in fact it kept coming down during our stay of three days, so we waded through liquid Hawaii, had it above and around us; it took the kink out of our hair and the starch out of our wear" but Honolulu fully repaid such an anxious and tedious journey. The "Paradise of the Pacific" is a delicious tropical fruits, such a wealth of gorgeous flowers, palms of nearly all varieties, bread fruit trees, banyans, cocoanuts, banana groves with irrigation ditches between spaces of from 12 to 15 feet, umbrella trees, and such an endless array of flowering trees so gorgeous that they fairly dazzle the eye. Hedges of hibiscus, with their rich, dark green foliage and magnificent scarlet blossoms, well kept vines that climb over the long verandas, for the people live much out-of-doors. These vines festoon and climb and ramble over the roofs and then reach out and get hold of trees, and shrubs and reveal in the moist, warm tropical air till the eye is sated with color and beauty.

The market is well kept and an interesting spot to study the products of land and sea, the native characteristics and dress. But Hawaii, beautiful as a dream, has its Molokai, and it is the inevitable fate of a barbaric race to fall before the civilized power entering its domain. The result of civilization has proved most pathetic and tragical, bringing the desolation of empty huts and deserted villages. In a little over a century 400,000 simple people, strong in physique but weak in knowledge, have fallen victims to greeds and vices brought by adventurers, until less than one-eighth remain of the picturesque Kanakas. Fewer feet trod each year the coral-beaded shores, less frequent and fainter have come their soft spoken aloha—national greeting—"I love you"—until it seems very soon the native Hawaiians will live only in legends and memories of a vanished age.

The people are more intelligent than those of Porto Rico, better developed physically, well educated, courteous and kind to strangers. There were no saloons or dance houses on the ocean front as we see too often in American cities, though there are vices in plenty. Still Honolulu will compare favorably with our cities in the States. The women have pleasing faces, dark skin, plentiful tresses which they arrange becomingly beautiful pearls, teeth, and sparkling black eyes. Of course the Kanakas form a small portion of the population. According to the census of 1896 there were 21,816 Chinese, There are Japs and Portuguese, English and Americans, for Honolulu is one of the most cosmopolitan cities in the world.

We happened to be in the city when the memorial service for Queen Victoria was held by the Anglican church at St. Andrew's Cathedral, the program including several classical musical selections besides the special ritual for services of this kind. The Bible selection was from the Apocrypha, Ecclesiasticus 4:1-16. The only time in years that this section of the Bible has been read in public in Honolulu was on the occasion of the memorial services to the late Emperor William I of Germany, which took place about thirteen years ago. The Right Rev. Alfred Willis, Bishop of Honolulu, delivered the address. Around the rail of the chancel there were sixty-four wax tapers, each standing one of the years of the Victorian reign. The consuls of Great Britain, Russia, Italy, Spain, Austria-Hungary, Denmark, Belgium, Sweden, Norway, Mexico, Peru and China, were present, the latter in National dress. Governor and Mrs. Dole, government officials, members of judiciary, also some representatives of the defunct Hawaiian dynasty were present. The day was exceedingly warm and humid, and for one, though the ceremony was impressive, I was glad to breathe a clearer air outside, and get back on board ship.

J. B. BARRE.

In the Barcroft system of propelling barges on canals, which is now coming into use on some English waterways, a sixty-inch three-bladed propeller is placed on each side of the barge, and the two are driven in opposite directions by a small engine placed on deck just in front of the stern-post. Motion is transmitted by vertical shafts geared to the engine and the propellers. The screws may be removed during loading and unloading, and as the boiler weighs but 2,600 pounds the addition to the load carried is small, while the machinery does not interfere with the cargo or with the passage of bridges and locks. The gentle motion of the propeller blades in giving a speed of five or six miles an hour does not wash the banks.

The most perfect screws in existence were made by the late Mr. T. C. Schneider, mechanician at the Johns Hopkins University. The machine for the extremely fine rulings of Prof. Rowland's spectrum gratings required screws a foot or more long of the greatest possible accuracy throughout their length, and the four screws ground have shown no appreciable error under the severest tests to which they could be put.

Attempts to combat the codlin moth by breeding a certain small fly will probably be made in New Zealand. Discovery of the parasite was brought about by the observation that the proportion of sound apples increased on plantations where spraying to destroy the codlin moth caterpillars had been discontinued. Added codlin moth eggs in great numbers were found, and in some of them were eggs of the parasite.
